THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON

FOR JUNE 12, 1904.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

SUBJECT: Christ crucified.—Mark 15: 22-39.

GOLDEN TEXT: Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures.—I Cor. 15:3.

By Rov. J. E. Gilbert, D. D., Secretary American Society of Religious Education.

CONTEXT.—Pilato's last words scaled the fate of Jesus. Removing the robe in which He had been arrayed and restoring His own apparel, the soldiers led Him away. At first He bore the cross on which He was to be crucified, but probably because of His falling strength. Simon, a Cyrenian (verse 21), supposed to have been a disciple (Acts. xix. 33), was made to assist Him, A great multitude of people followed, among whom were faithful women, who bewalled and lamented (Luke, xxifi: 27). Turning to them, Jesus said: "Weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves," at the same time predicting the calamilies that would be fall them in the destruction of the city. Westward, through the streets and beyond the wall (Hebrews, Xili: 21), the procession passed—Jesus, the condemned; Simon, His cross-bearer; the two malefactors, the executioners, the Roman soldiers, the chief priests, the rubble, the tender-hearted woman. His mother, the beloved John. Hint and love followed the Lord to His tragic death.

GOLGOTHA.—Just outside the city (John, xix: 20) the procession halted at a slight elevation of ground, hardly arge googh to the called a lill. Sim of the common among Christians. The word signifies place of a skull. Some think that as place for the execution of criminals, it thereby obtained its name. Others a tradition, by no means incredible, that it had the appearance of a skull. Some think that it had the appearance of a skull. Some think that it had the appearance of a skull. Some think that it had the appearance of a skull. Some think that it had the appearance of a skull. Some think that it had the appearance of a skull. Some think that it had the appearance of a skull. DRINK—There was one act of plly in the crucifixion of Jesus. With the desire to mitigate the suffering of the condemned the wealthy ladios of Jerusalem were accustomed to provide at their own expense of stupelying draught of whee medicated with some powerful opiate. This they did regardless of any sympathy for the criminal, it was the result of rabbinic teaching (Prov. xxxi: 6), an effort to tone down the severity of the old heathen world, and to promote humanitarian sentiments. "The effect of the draught was to dull the nerves, to cloud the intellect, to provide an anesthetic against some part of the agonics of that awful death." But when the cup was offered to Jesus he tasted and refused to drink. He desired to retain the full force of His powers, to be conscious to the end, that He might suffer all that He must, minister to those who were about Him, and at last yield up His spirit (John xi 18). This was an act of sublime herolsm.

PRAYER—The fearful torture awakened the sun stood at the meridian. There have been strange portents (Luke xxill; 45), and stout hearts are boginning to fail, All eyes are fastened upon Him. Friends no longer fear to show their love and grief. The words of forgiveness and filial care are now to be followed by those of personal foresight and trust, "I thirst," says Jesus, as the awful fever seized him. Receiving the sour wine of the soldiers (John xix; 23-29), He added, "It is finished." The work of His life was done. His suffering was complete. The last item of the Divine plan and every detail of prophecy had been accomplished. The world had been redeemed by His preclous blood. (I Pot. i; 18-12), "Father, into thy hands I commond my spirit," was His last utterance. (Jake xxiii: 6.) And "He gave up the ghost."

Goin X: 18). This was an act of sublime herolam.

PRAYER—The fearful torture awakened no anger, extorted no scream of agony. On the contrary the heart of Jesus was filled with Divine compassion. He was more concerned for His murderers than for Himself. While they were in the very act of driving the cruel nails through His lacerated flesh, He Cled out, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," Luke xxiiii 21. This was the undoubted truth, repeated in after years (Acts iii; I; 1 Cor. iii 8). By this prayer Jesus fulfilled a prophecy (isa, iii; 12) and illustrated. His own teaching (Matt. vi. 44-45). He did not intend that rhe sin of the chief priests' should be pardoned unconditionally. There is but one way to forgiveness (I Cor. ii 8: He rather stayed the vergoance of heaven, which might have justly interfered in His behalf, until time and opportunity were offered for repentence. (Acts ii: 3:.)

"ITILE—Over the head of the cross was written the offense for which Jesus died," The King of the Jesus," It was written in Hebrew, the language of the church; in Greek the language of the people; in I alin, the language of the people; in I alin, the language of the people; in I alin, the Jesus, but a severe rebuke to the Jews. Probably Plate intended in this way to humble those who had forced him to violate his convictions, and to announce also the complete overthrow of Jewish hope for a king (John xx; 16). Besides, in a sense which no one understood, it was trife. He was the long-promised Messiah, the king of the spiritual fernel when the property with His misery, sitting at their sport while He was habeing in pain. To each a portion was assigned, and for His coat, a pretty place, without evam, they threw diec (John, xix; 24). Little did these hardened men, accustomed
